Our recent online conference, Community For All, was a great day full of inspiring and challenging messages about how cohousing can welcome diversity in more effective and meaningful ways. Click HERE for a taste of what was shared. The four minute video barely touches the richness of the full conference. Fortunately it's not too late to register for the full event with all 13 recordings and more. Click here for more information.

Nuts and Bolts of Community

A Cooperative Conference

Cohousers are amazing, which is why our next event is all about you: your topics, your knowledge and your creativity. Whether you are a world class expert, or a new beginner, your input helps us all make cohousing better together.

Living in cohousing teaches us that the best interactions often happen in the unplanned moments of connection that are designed into the cohousing lifestyle. This event is modeled on exactly that concept. We'll provide plenty of structure to showcase the incredible talent and knowledge of our community.

Come learn! Come teach! Come ask, and answer and absorb all that cohousing has to offer. We'll be using a structure known as "Open Space Technology" to build community. You won't want to miss our first annual Cohousing Open!

What are the systems that make our communities work? Everything from budgeting to work day planning, capital reserves to paying for common meals. If you have a system, a spreadsheet, a policy for it, this is a great place to share it.

Why Diversity?
By: Karen Gimnig

I've been in a lot of conversations about race in various ways, and in particular about racism in cohousing. Somewhere amidst all the conversations, it occurred to me to ask a question I haven't been hearing. Why do communities want to be diverse? Which led to: What do we mean when we say it? and... Who could have predicted a pandemic, right? I mean, we all know that unexpected things will come up when you are working on a project as big as a cohousing community, but a pandemic?
